From the Chair

This is a busy and exciting time of the year! While juggling the merriment of the season and crowded social calendars, business must go on. Holidays and scheduled vacations burden those left carrying the load. Take a deep breath and make time to reflect positively on 2006 and create new beginnings, new energy in 2007.

Dust off those well-intentioned resolutions made less than 12 months ago. Did I achieve last year's goals that are important to my well-being? If not, why? This is an excellent time to reflect on the importance of those goals and to negotiate new ones. Doing so is an exercise of self-awareness and self-fulfillment that can be satisfying if executed with careful consideration. Life throws curve balls and what was important on January 1 may have changed as the year progressed. Grant yourself leniency to evolve and adjust goals, yet don't let yourself off the hook for ones that matter! And, at the top of everyone's list should be "Peace on Earth." Not with the naivety of a child, but with the understanding that each and every one of us has the ability and the responsibility to run our businesses and lives as if PEACE is an attainable goal. Each of us has a direct impact on the global world we live in.

May you and your loved ones have a blessed holiday season and above all, Peace on Earth.
